Literature on migration and drug use and sex work among migrants in Europe

May 2007

1. SUMMARY

This literature search was carried out by 6 separate libraries during March and April 2007. Each of the participants in the project completed a search strategy form outlining the databases and other sources from which references were retrieved. Support and advice was provided by the Information Service in Trinity College Dublin, Ireland and from the Centre for Reviews and Dissemination in the University of York, England. The information retrieval process was coordinated by the National Documentation Centre on Drug Use (NDC) in Dublin. The NDC also commissioned the development of a web portal through which all the citations gathered by the various institutions could be searched in a similar to that used in online bibliographical databases. The organisations contributing to the project are identified under 2.1. The number of references retrieved in each of the 5 languages are identified under 2.2.

The results of the searches were collated in spreadsheets the structure of which was determined by the NDC, each participant using the same meta data elements. It was necessary to collate this information in the format so that they might be imported into the portal. Each participant in the project completed a search strategy form identifying the databases and other sources used to obtain the literature and describing the search strategies used to retrieve information from these sources. These search strategies are present below under section 3.1.

The outcome of the literature search demonstrates that the volume of literature on the subject of drug use among migrant sex workers is very limited. All of the contributors to the project altered the search strategy, in a manner most appropriate to the information sources they were using, to broaden the search and ensure that research in related topics – such as migrants and drug use or migrants and health – would be retrieved. The topic of communicable diseases is one of the most consistent themes in the literature, with particular attention given to access to services and communicating with minority groups.

The various searches retrieved 429 references to literature, including journal articles, reports, conference papers and dissertations. All of these citations are available through the portal. A list of organisations dealing with migrants was also compiled and this will be supplied with the citations.

3. PRESENTATION OF RESULTS

All of the search results were imported into the bibliographic database. This database is available for searching through the portal at the following URL: <http://.correlation.atomicassets.com>. Records can be retrieved from the database using a simple search, as below: The first image is of the search box where the search term is entered; the second image shows the display of search results (can also be displayed as a list); the third shows the full individual record.

Title: Perception subjective des risques et stratégies de protection chez des consommatrices de drogues.

Description: L'étude du mode de vie des femmes qui se prostituent et consomment des drogues conduit à montrer que la prostitution, dans le groupe concerné de 14 femmes suisses, est un choix conscient. La violence et la perte de dignité sont considérées comme des risques majeurs, avant celui de la contamination par le VIH. L'information sur les MST, le VIH et l'hépatite reste à affiner car les stratégies actuelles de prévention ne suffisent pas.
